Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: . . . inasmuch as practically all employees in summer hotels work seven days a week, whereas a number of all-year hotels arrange their work on a six-day schedule. The shorter hours reported in summer hotels may possibly be due to a greater difficulty in securing accurate information regarding hours in these establishments, and may also be partly accounted for by the fact that in summer hotels meals are served over a shorter range of hours, and employees are given more time off in the afternoon. Age and Length of Experience. --Summer hotel workers are considerably younger and more inexperienced than those employed in other hotels. As shown by Table 10, over onehalf (54.0 per cent.) of the summer workers were under twenty-five years of age, whereas only one-fourth (26.5 per cent.) of those in other hotels were under this age. A difference is also shown in the proportion of women over forty, who constituted only 8.4 per cent. of the summer hotel workers, but 22.4 per cent. of those employed in hotels open throughout the year. One-fourth (26.0 per cent.) of the summer workers reported this as their first season or year in hotel work (Table 11) as compared with a much smaller proportion (6.2 per cent.) of the women employed in other hotels, while the proportion having six years experience or more was over twice as great in the latter establishments, being 45.9 per cent. as...
