Excerpt from A Sketch of the Life and Works of John Milton: From a Course of Lectures Held at the Victoria Lyceum During the Winter of 1885-1886 The family of John Milton probably derives its name from the parish of Great Milton near Thame in Oxfordshire. The grandfather of the poet was a yeoman: at Stanton St.John, about ve miles from Oxford, and at the same time under-ranger of the forest of Shotover, His son, John by name, joined the Anglican church and was in consequence disinherited by the father who remained faithful to Rome. John then went up to London where he set up in business as a scrivener, a position in which he performed the motions of a solicitor of our own day. He succeeded, and acquired a considerable fortune which he owed to his industry and intelligence. He lived in the heart of the City, Bread Street, Cheapside, in a house which bore the sign of the Spread Eagle. Here, John Milton the poet, was born on the 9 of December 1608. His childhood was happy and rich in promise. From his father who was an excellent musician and distinguished himself even as a composer, he learned the art which was destined to distract and to soothe him in his blindness; his private tutor, Thomas Young, as well as the headmaster of St. Pauls School which he afterwards frequented as a day scholar, Alexander Gill, were men of note, the latter especially was one of the best scholars and the greatest pedagogue of his time. Young Milton studied with extraordinary zeal, reading deep into the night, whereby he sowed already when a boy the seeds...
