That he loves her, is duty, is justice; I commend him for it; but to treat me with disdain, is cruelty, is perfidy to friendship and his reverend tutors memory. My God! Eliza--is it possible--yes, 1 have lived for Davenent to despise me. Do you not wonder how I could write on the preceding trifles, when this, to me, heartrending intelligence was untold I thought, my dear Eliza, to conceal it from you, that you might not share my grief. Alas! my soul in agonies extreme was bursting to vent itself on paper to you, since I cannot personally sigh oer my woe. The benevolent, humane, anil tender lord Sedley, beheld me with scorn. My heart almost dies within me at the torturing reminiscence. Had any conduct of mine, since we...
